Three Peculiarities

The superior qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla are secured by three peculiarities, viz:

First—The combination of remedial agents used.

Second—The proportion in which they are mixed.

Third—The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

These are peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are unlike any other. The result of these peculiarities is a medicine of unusual strength, which effects cures hitherto unknown. A trial, or even a glance at the article, inspires confidence, because it bears unquestionable indication of a thorough understanding on the part of those who originated it.

A peculiarity of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which in itself is one hundred doses for one dollar, is the skill and care with which it is prepared, and the personal supervision which is constantly given to it by a chemist of long experience. You can see, by only one dose, that it is helping you. The cures effected by Hood's Sarsaparilla appeal to the judgment and happiness of many thousands of our fellow citizens, and are every reasonably expect it will do

Brewer, April 17, 1884.

The Extension of the tariff bill has been postponed until Thursday next.

One week from to-day has been set apart for consideration of the shipping bill in the House.

The report is current in Washington that Attorney General Brewster will retire from the Cabinet.

The anti-Blaine press are sadly in need of consolation when they have to turn to the editorial page of the New York Herald to find it.

Every day that the Democratic majority continues the debate on the tariff bill furnishes the Republicans with additional campaign material.

An exchange says: "Spring has opened auspiciously overhead." It has been altogether too open overhead in this section for some time past.

Delaware Republicans on Thursday elected five Blaine delegates and two-thirds of the New Jersey delegation are also said to favor his nomination.

Secretary Chandler has issued a proclamation announcing that the U. S. Government will give a reward of $25,000 for the rescue of the Greely party.

Mr. Watterson remarks in the Courier-Journal: that "the question is shall Sam Randall, backed by 400,000 Democrats, and not a single electoral vote, rule the Democratic party, or be ruled by it." Yes, and it is a decidedly troublesome question for the Democracy to answer.

The Indiana Democratic Association has formerly announced the candidacy of Senator McDonald, whose nomination it is declared would restore harmony in the ranks of that party. The Democracy stands sadly in need of harmony but whether or not McDonald can fill the bill is a matter of considerable doubt.

The Index of Marion, South Carolina, says: "Accounts from different sections of the county report many cases of actual suffering, caused by persons being unable to get bread. There has been no such time since the war when provisions have been so scarce. There are, perhaps, hundreds in Marion county to-day, who cannot get enough bread to eat. The largest liberality must prevail, or starvation in some instances will ensue."

The editor of the Commercial, reiterates the nonsense of the Bangor correspondent of the Boston Advertiser about a lack of enthusiasm for Mr. Blaine in this State and adds that anything could suit the Democrats better in Maine than Blaine's nomination. Nothing could be further from the truth than such a statement as every Democrat of common sense knows that, with Mr. Blaine at the head of the ticket Maine would roll up a tremendous majority for the Republicans.

The experience Kansas has passed through under the administration of a Democratic Governor, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean, has been the healthful means of more firmly cementing the Republican elements of that State; and there is no sort of doubt that the party that so long maintained the worth and promoted the prosperity of that commonwealth will again assert its supremacy and redeem the State in the next election. So manifestly are affairs being directed to this result, the Democrats show no present disposition to enter upon a very vigorous campaign, apparently conceding the superior strength of the opposition.

The severe sentence with which the Boston garroters have received of twelve years in the State Prison, will have a tendency to put a check upon the threatened revival of that crime. It was one of the most tempting and ingenious methods for robbery by violence ever devised by criminal skill, and it may be remembered how rapidly it became an epidemic and spread from England to the Continent and to the United States. It was only suppressed by severe and special punishment, and it is considered so dangerous that the penalty of [illegible] by British Courts, while the [illegible] has been [illegible] a revival of it in this country until the [illegible] in Boston.

presenting his views so convincingly as to force conviction on the minds of his readers and his readers.

There has been discussion as to Mr. Lincoln's religious belief. He was silent as to his own preference among creeds. He indicated no particular denomination to which he did not entertain. All of his relations with Protestant Christianity, in the trials of war, availed himself of the services of eminent Catholic prelate Archbishop Hughes of New York—in a personal mission to England, of great importance, at a time when the relations between this and two countries were disturbed and threatening. Through the whole period of the war he constantly directed the attention of the Nation to dependence on God. It may indeed be doubted whether he omitted in a single state paper, in every message to Congress, in every proclamation to the people, he made it prominent. In July, 1863, after the battle of Gettysburg, he called upon the people to give thanks because "it has pleased Almighty God to hearken to the supplications and prayers of an afflicted people and to vouchsafe signal and extended victories to the Army and Navy of the United States," and he asked the people "to devote humbly to the Divine Master and to invoke the influence of the Holy Spirit to subdue the anger which has produced and so long sustained an needless and cruel rebellion."

In another occasion, recounting the blessings which he deems to the Union, he says: "No human counsel has devised, nor has any mortal hand worked out, these great things. They are the gracious gifts of the Most High God, who, while dealing with us in judgment for our sins, has nevertheless remembered mercy." Throughout his entire official career—dated at all times with exacting duty and painful responsibility—he never forgot his own dependence on the dependence of the people upon a Higher Power. In his inaugural address, delivered to an immense crowd assembled at the White House on the 4th of April, to open the 1st session of the 37th Congress of the Union, the President, standing as he unconsciously was in the very shadow of death, solemnly referred to his interest "in the midst of your joyous expectation. He from whom all blessings flow must first be invoked."

An English lady has offered a reward of £20,000 for the rescue of Gen. Gordon from Khartoum.

WITHOUT CONTROVERSY

Osborne says, "What you have at your death is worth a controversy, else the lawyers will get it." "But then," replied Johnson, "why the thing is as simple as simple can be—your property in a few easy policies, payable to your wife, children, or daughter, and on presentation, on your death, the beneficiary applies for the money at the office of the company, gets it, and there's an end of it." "On the other hand, you keep it all in your own hands till death comes, and then it is divided. Each in harmony should prevail, but it would take a long time to have your will proved, and in every case objected would be the immediate cause of the conflict which might leave your family without means, while she was waiting to receive what might be a dollar. Promptness in payment of just claims is the darkness of life assurance. It is a comfort to the widow and orphan in the middle ages to be able to draw a new check immediately on her husband's decease, with out being embarrassed by the executor's delay. Go to the Confederation, and be insured in The Mutual Life Ins. Co.

Ordinance Amendatory to Section 43 of Ordinance Entitled "Injurious Practices."

IN CITY COUNCIL

By the City Council of the City of Bangor—Be it Ordained—

SEC. 1. Section forty-three of an Ordinance entitled "Injurious Practices," is hereby amended so as to read as follows, viz:

"SEC. 43. That if two or more persons shall not stand in a group, or move to each other, talking or loitering upon any sidewalk or cross walk, or in or about the entrance to any public or private house of business or any other building, or the entrance of any premises in either side of any street, alley or lane, to the annoyance of the passers by, or the occupants or occupants of such places or premises, under the penalty provided in section 40 of said Ordinance, viz: Shall pay a sum of not less than one nor more than twenty dollars; and if any such person or persons shall neglect or refuse to move off or disperse on the request of the City Marshal or any policeman, he and they shall be subject to like penalty, and the City Marshal or any policeman shall have the power to remove or disperse them."

The foregoing is a true copy of an Ordinance passed Feb. 7th, 1882, by the City Council.

SCROFULA

Usually develops in early life, and is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, thickening of the lips, enlarged neck, sore eyes, &c. Scrofulous condition is often hereditary, but bad diet, too free use of tea, want of sufficient and nourishing food will induce it. Some people are troubled with scrofulous swelling of the glands, and with ulcers and kernels, which may cause very little pain; others may have inward scrofula, scrofula of the lungs, scrofula of the spleen, scrofula of the kidneys and scrofula of the bones. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will drive away any case of scrofula, and not to appear in another place, for their action on the blood and bowels will carry the disease entirely from the body.

Mrs. Ireson's Treasury

A pretty interior was that of a certain small room, pink tinted by the sunset. Its windows facing the West and at first it always seemed well furnished. Bright rugs were over the worn matting and red cushions held common chairs. Pictures and the old brass shovel and tongs helped indeed to the cheerful aspect of the place. Once there sat by the window a little woman of eighty years, a real peanut for her wrinkled skin was as delicate as a seashell white rose leaf, her eyes very soft blue, and the frill by her pretty cap border was shining white. People who could not think of an old age not dull often found comfort but for possessions. Ruth was in her second childhood—but if this was true she was like those who have become children of the kingdom—not like the foolish little ones of earth never wise in simplicity or meek in weakness.

"Nothing could be better than this opening!" exclaimed a young girl by another window.

Nothing ever is better than the newest blessing God sends," returned the old lady, smiling on the fair girl, whose bright hair and beer her own youthful image. Seeing them together one would think of a morning full sunshine and spring blossoms, of an evening of moonlight and soft snowflakes.

But Ruth was forced to be very practical in these times, so she added in a moment: "Mrs Ireson is wealthy is a widow with only daughter. They board at a great hotel and all she requires of me is to read to her, to write letters, or to sew a little. I need not leave you until ten and I can come home at five. With these privileges and will keep punctually."

"Yes, child, I knew you would succeed, said grannie."

"That is because she never went looking for work, thought worldly wise Ruth, going cheerfully away to get grannie's supper. "She does not know the struggle for life in this city of 1,000,000 souls."

Every morning after that the old lady was made comfortable for the day, and a slighter was encouraged to look for occasional work, and Ruth was about her new employment. From the first she was well-treated by Mrs Ireson, an impulsive, shallow creature was very gracious, her appreciation of all pretty Ruth's good qualities seemed instantaneous. She showered her, if the had known it her mother had been a lady, her father a wise, good man. Each day went swiftly by, each evening Ruth came gaily home to pet the old lady, to bring her little treats for her supper, or at the chief flowers. A few months grannie came to have a new rocking chair, a soft black shawl and a quaint little Quaker bonnet, for when the summer days came she was going once more to church. This would be a great event, the first so high up and was so glad Ruth joined to take her out often.

On Sunday morning, as Ruth sat sewing for Miss Ireson, the latter watched her admiringly. Then idly twirling her diamond ring, remarked, "I should think that one would—even your mother—would be a great bother to you, to old."

"No indeed!" replied Ruth [illegible] she has cared for me since I was ten years old. I lost father and mother and [illegible] was left feeble then."

"Oh you must be a care of her, of course. I only meant that she was quite a weight to your hands."

Such a flush passed over Ruth's face that the lady half guessed her indignation and continued: "Well you are attached to her—and that is the best you can do for [illegible] the sunny daughter. Maud spends [illegible] and opera—oh did you see the [illegible] bought Friday?"

"Did I see it? No. Mrs Ireson, look in drawer and look at two under exquisite point lace."

"Isn't it for a princess, to [illegible] young girl, touching it lightly with her finger. "I have fine lace so much. I [illegible] sort of lace, like the [illegible] cobwebs. I like to see the curious old [illegible] cities where they make [illegible] the robes of state for so pretty."

"For price of it is the price," confessed Mrs Ireson. "I think is shockingly expensive. The fact is I was not born to [illegible] When I married Ireson he was [illegible] the butter business and I never dreamed he'd slip into oil and make his fortune flying, too, before he had a chance to lose it, as I have no doubt he would have done. You could have it if you quite liked, I'm sure enough, if wish you had."

"I mean to be one, my grandma has a perfect lady," replied Ruth, looking at respect for her person who [illegible] ted, "How absurd! Touch at [illegible] gentility?"

At that moment a servant appeared with the cards of ladies in the parlor, and Mrs Ireson left the room saying, "Maud is out when you go I've your key at the office."

Ruth had but a half hour longer to stay a pleasant half hour then by the open window with the pretty parlor below. She could hear the plash of the fountain and the shouts of merry children, while the delicate spring odors were wafted in to her as she sewed. She looked very bright to her for if she was poor she was young. When she went home she might bring us a bouquet of blue violets and told her of the beautiful point lace. Ruth laughingly declared it as the a pattern as her own lon, treasured bit of linen edging wasted as fine as cobweb and kept for state occasions only.

On returning to Mrs Ireson the next morning Ruth was perplexed to find the lady exceedingly cold and stiff in manner. No task was assigned her, and when she asked what she should do first, Mrs Ireson made no reply. Miss Maud who [illegible] tall black browed young person, exclaimed very vehemently, "Well, mother, do you propose to speak out, or insist I?"

"Hush, Maud! Ruth, I am dreadfully annoyed about something."

"Can I live you any help, Mrs Ireson?"

"I'm sure I hope so! Can you say what became of that point lace last night?"

"Did you not put it back in the drawer? Where did you see it last?"

"In your hands, which you took up to take the cards brought you!"

"Ma says"—broke out Miss Maud, ingressively but Ruth interrupted. "When I took out the lace I locked the drawer from habit and dropped the key into my watch pocket. I left one hand when I went down stairs, for when I came up the drawer was locked, the key still in my possession, but the lace was gone."

There was no rumor in Ruth's voice as she replied: "That is very strange, for it must as soon as you had gone out I looked to see if you had replaced the lace, and it was not to be seen."

"Where had it gone to, pray tell," demanded the lady, severely.

"I cannot imagine! Did you not put it somewhere?"

"No I have looked everywhere."

"Yes, everywhere," burst from Maud, "and it is ridiculous for you to say you don't know what became of it."

"Miss Ireson, your daughter must not insult me, for I—"

"Don't be theatrical child," Maud, "Own right now we will send to the station for a police man. A girl of your age had better avoid public exposure."

"We still" said Ruth, with a dignity in her anger which silenced even Maud for a moment. "Would I any fashionable person do so ill by a thing as to steal an article left in my hands. If—"

A plainly dressed man stepped from the next room, remarking, calmly, "Let the young woman go home. We can look into this matter without her, when I have put a question or two."

Ruth gave him a grateful glance, answered his few questions, then trembling with grief and indignation, left the room, not knowing that she had been watched by a detective, who had already interviewed grannie and her neighbors. He reflected that the good old creature reading her Bible might be a well arranged tableau; the pretty girl might be full of guile, still a reputation for all the Christian virtues is rarely acquired in a tenement house, and when earned is usually deserved. Moreover, of ladies who lost valuables one day, and found them safely laid away the next. His detective knew some hundred odd.

Ruth, hurrying home, kept back her tears until she opened the home door to see grannie so sweet, and calm, when she told her story, with passionate sobs, the old lady listened in shocked pity. "If they do not find it, they will tell, far and wide, that I stole it. As I came out to-day a lady in the hall said, 'Such girls are always frauds—the more ladyfied they are the more they long to get into the penitentiary.'"

"The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that [illegible]" said grannie, brokenly, much wondering how any one could grieve her Ruth so terribly.

Next day, Ruth, urged by grannie, [illegible] collect the hotel, but the door of Mrs Ireson's room was shut in her face by a maid, who remarked, [illegible] was to be to say when the lady would be heard from. Also that, her mornings were for [illegible] looking for work, but with no success. The dull season was close at hand. The rent must be paid and food from day to day. Ruth's face grew whiter, grannie's sunny [illegible] but sometimes at midnight, when prayed half aloud, and no solemn [illegible] ing in the darkness awake, [illegible] the young girl. Mrs Ireson owed Ruth thirty dollars, but she did not send it and Ruth was glad she had no appetite, their food must be meagre if they kept out of debt.

At last there came a [illegible] day when grannie was glad to see Ruth go out in the morning. She watched her down the street, then, trembling with eagerness, took her own Sunday attire and [illegible] her clothes. When ready to venture [illegible] the quiet little streets she [illegible] down out on the crowded pavements. Rough men moved boldly out of her [illegible] and children smiled up to the better [illegible] world, all face [illegible] cruelty was [illegible] pation, by further, until the dauntless [illegible] herself sent, fainted with [illegible] the door for a cool [illegible] [illegible] to her own [illegible] exactly where [illegible] ing rose which she left [illegible] fated day, saying, [illegible] time to [illegible] her, [illegible] took [illegible] sadly to [illegible] a [illegible] her [illegible] fatigued.
